For each book, students should identify three quotations that are either: significant to the story, convicting or compelling to you personally, or interesting in some other way. A typed or handwritten document containing each of these quotations will be due on the first Friday of school. Additionally, as you read pay careful attention to character development and conflict. Practice active reading by reviewing regularly with your parents, noting significant ideas, and keeping a running list of lingering questions.

The Stonehaven School exists to glorify God by cultivating truth, goodness, and beauty in students through a distinctly Christ-centered classical education.
